Easter Sunday & Communion

As we prepare for communion on Easter Sunday, let us examine our hearts, seek reconciliation, and reflect on Jesus' sacrifice, remembering the new covenant in His blood and body.

God is Life-Giving

Mark 16:1-6; 1 Corinthians 15:1-4, 20-22

The Point: The resurrection of Christ changes everything.

The Bible Meets Life: There are words that change everything. They put in perspective all the moments that came before and redirect all that are to come. A minister says, "I now pronounce you husband and wife." An ultrasound technician says, "There's the heart beating!" The judge says, "Not guilty." The doctor says, "You are cancer free."

With just a few simple words, the world is transformed in a moment. There is hope where there was despair. There is a sense of new beginnings where it had seemed the world was coming to an end. The tables are turned, the script is flipped. It's a brand-new day.

One Sunday morning, two thousand years ago, three frightened women heard a sentence that didn't just change everything for them; it changed everything for everybody. This good news would topple empires. It would redraw maps. It would alter eternity. It was the most life giving, paradigm shifting, world transforming sentence that has ever been spoken. It is the reason we are reading this session today. What was this sentence?

He has risen.

Live It Out: Personally. Reflect on the significance of Jesus's resurrection in your personal life. Take time to thank God for His love and grace, recognizing that, through Jesus, you have hope for eternal life. In your circle. Share the message of the resurrection with friends or family. Have conversations about the importance of faith in Jesus and what His resurrection means for forgiveness and new beginnings.
